Continuation of 5. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: the arguments therein are not persuasive. The Examiner is giving the claims the broadest reasonable interpretation regarding "semantic type" as dictated by MPEP 2111. The words "semantic type" broadly refer to a group or category of things having similar meaning. This is interpreted as data type, for example, where images are one data type and text is another data type. All data composing images are grouped because they have similar meaning in the sense that they all compose images. All data composing text is grouped because they have similar meaning in the sense that they all refer to text. MPEP 2111.01 instructs that words of a claim must be given their plain meaning unless the specification provides a clear definition. In this case, the definition provided by the specification is not clear ("different connotative meanings that the information contents of resources can have, as perceived by the user"). Since the examples that immediately follow the definition in the specification are degrees of volatility, it is appropriate to apply images and text to the claim since images and text have different volatility. Finally, it is noted that the argument presented for the first time in the remarks of 6/2/02 states that data type and semantic type are two different levels of information abstraction. However nothing in the claims make the rejection based on data type inappropriate. If the Applicant intends the claims to be directed to a form of information abstraction higher than data type, it must be clearly specified in the claims. It is not at all clear to the Examiner that semantic type is a well-known term in the art nor that semantic type is necessarily different than data
